

Half of new graduates are jobless or underemployed

Updated 4/23/2012 1:10 PM

504

30

WASHINGTON (AP) – The U.S. college class of 2012 is in for a rude welcome to the world of work.

A weak labor market already has left half of young college graduates either jobless or underemployed in positions that don't fully use their skills and knowledge.

Young adults with bachelor's degrees are increasingly scraping by in lower-wage jobs — waiter or waitress, bartender, retail clerk or receptionist, for example — and that's confounding their hopes a degree would pay off despite higher tuition and mounting student loans.

By Eric Risberg, AP

Corey Fry, a graduate from the University of California at San Francisco nursing school, tries on his cap and gown at his apartment on June 8, 2010.

Sponsored Links

57-Year-Old Mom Looks 25
 Mom Reveals $5 Wrinkle Trick That Has Angered Doctors!
ConsumerLifestyles.org

Canada Debt Bailout?
 Canadian banks to forgive 75% of consumer debt in 2012! Learn more...
Debt180.ca

BlackBerry® Official Site
 Discover the best experience yet on an enhanced lineup of smartphones.
BlackBerry.com

Buy a link here

STORY: Economists' outlook brightens

An analysis of government data conducted for the Associated Press lays bare the highly uneven prospects for holders of bachelor's degrees.

Opportunities for college graduates vary widely.

While there's strong demand in science, education and health fields, arts and humanities flounder. Median wages for those with bachelor's degrees are down from 2000, hit by technological changes that are eliminating midlevel jobs such as bank tellers. Most future job openings are projected to be in lower-skilled positions such as home health aides, who can provide personalized attention as the U.S. population ages.

Taking underemployment into consideration, the job prospects for bachelor's degree holders fell last year to the lowest level in more than a decade.

"I don't even know what I'm looking for," says Michael Bledsoe, who described months of fruitless job searches as he served customers at a Seattle coffeehouse. The 23-year-old graduated in 2010 with a creative writing degree.

Initially hopeful that his college education would create opportunities, Bledsoe languished for three months before finally taking a job as a barista, a position he has held for the last two years. In the beginning he sent three or four resumes day. But, Bledsoe said, employers questioned his lack of experience or the practical worth of his major. Now he sends a resume once every two weeks or so.

Bledsoe, currently making just above minimum wage, says he has received financial help from his parents to help pay off student loans. He is now mulling whether to go to

Videos you may be interested in

5 year-old kicks her way to black belt

RAW VIDEO: Winds Cause Dramatic Plane

ING DIRECT $50 ingdirect.ca

byTaboola
More videos

Most Popular

Stories

- George Zimmerman's lawyers give him a...
- Number of painkiller-addicted newborns...
- Woman stops child 'sacrifice' in cemetery
- Wife of Edwards' ex-aide breaks down on...
- Romney's veep 'tryouts' give voters a seat...

Videos

- Raw Video: Japanese ship rides Tsunami waves
- Raw Video: Bear wanders onto Colo. campus
- Raw video: Tent collapse in downtown St. Louis

Photos

- New World Trade Center stands tall
- Editorial Cartoons
- Baby animals spring up at zoos

Most Popular E-mail Newsletter

Sign up to get:

Top viewed stories, photo galleries and community posts of the day

Most popular right now:

Man sues BMW for 'persistent' erection

Sign up for USA TODAY E-mail newsletters

graduate school, seeing few other options to advance his career. "There is not much out there, it seems," he said.

His situation highlights a widening but little-discussed labor problem. Perhaps more than ever, the choices that young adults make earlier in life — level of schooling, academic field and training, where to attend college, how to pay for it — are having a long-lasting financial impact.

"You can make more money on average if you go to college, but it's not true for everybody," says Harvard economist Richard Freeman, noting the growing risk of a debt bubble with total U.S. student loan debt surpassing $1 trillion. "If you're not sure what you're going to be doing, it probably bodes well to take some job, if you can get one, and get a sense first of what you want from college."

Andrew Sum, director of the Center for Labor Market Studies at Northeastern University who analyzed the numbers, said many people with a bachelor's degree face a double whammy of rising tuition and poor job outcomes. "Simply put, we're failing kids coming out of college," he said, emphasizing that when it comes to jobs, a college major can make all the difference. "We're going to need a lot better job growth and connections to the labor market, otherwise college debt will grow."

By region, the Mountain West was most likely to have young college graduates jobless or underemployed — roughly 3 in 5. It was followed by the more rural southeastern U.S., including Alabama, Kentucky, Mississippi and Tennessee. The Pacific region, including Alaska, California, Hawaii, Oregon and Washington, also was high on the list.

On the other end of the scale, the southern U.S., anchored by Texas, was most likely to have young college graduates in higher-skill jobs.

The figures are based on an analysis of the 2011 Current Population Survey data by Northeastern University researchers and supplemented with material from Paul Harrington, an economist at Drexel University, and the Economic Policy Institute, a Washington think tank. They rely on Labor Department assessments of the level of education required to do the job in 900-plus U.S. occupations, which were used to calculate the shares of young adults with bachelor's degrees who were "underemployed."

About 1.5 million, or 53.6%, of bachelor's degree-holders under the age of 25 last year were jobless or underemployed, the highest share in at least 11 years. In 2000, the share was at a low of 41%, before the dot-com bust erased job gains for college graduates in the telecommunications and IT fields.

Out of the 1.5 million who languished in the job market, about half were underemployed, an increase from the previous year.

Broken down by occupation, young college graduates were heavily represented in jobs that require a high school diploma or less.

In the last year, they were more likely to be employed as waiters, waitresses, bartenders and food-service helpers than as engineers, physicists, chemists and mathematicians combined (100,000 versus 90,000). There were more working in office-related jobs such as receptionist or payroll clerk than in all computer professional jobs (163,000 versus 100,000). More also were employed as cashiers, retail clerks and customer representatives than engineers (125,000 versus 80,000).

According to government projections released last month, only three of the 30 occupations with the largest projected number of job openings by 2020 will require a bachelor's degree or higher to fill the position — teachers, college professors and accountants. Most job openings are in professions such as retail sales, fast food and truck driving, jobs which aren't easily replaced by computers.

College graduates who majored in zoology, anthropology, philosophy, art history and humanities were among the least likely to find jobs appropriate to their education level; those with nursing, teaching, accounting or computer science degrees were among the most likely.

USA TODAY Digital Services

Mobile | E-Edition | Newsletters | RSS | Twitter | Podcasts | Widgets | e-Edition | USA TODAY for iPad | Kindle Edition | Subscribe to Home Delivery
Reprints & Permissions | USA TODAY Topics | Reporter Index | Corrections/Clarifications | Contact Us | Archives

In Nevada, where unemployment is the highest in the nation, Class of 2012 college seniors recently expressed feelings ranging from anxiety and fear to cautious optimism about what lies ahead.

With the state's economy languishing in an extended housing bust, a lot of young graduates have shown up at job placement centers in tears. Many have been squeezed out of jobs by more experienced workers, job counselors said, and are now having to explain to prospective employers the time gaps in their resumes.

"It's kind of scary," said Cameron Bawden, 22, who is graduating from the University of Nevada-Las Vegas in December with a business degree. His family has warned him for years about the job market, so he has been building his resume by working part time on the Las Vegas Strip as a food runner and doing a marketing internship with a local airline.

Bawden said his friends who have graduated are either unemployed or working along the Vegas Strip in service jobs that don't require degrees. "There are so few jobs and it's a small city," he said. "It's all about who you know."

Any job gains are going mostly to workers at the top and bottom of the wage scale, at the expense of middle-income jobs commonly held by bachelor's degree holders. By some studies, up to 95% of positions lost during the economic recovery occurred in middle-income occupations such as bank tellers, the type of job not expected to return in a more high-tech age.

David Neumark, an economist at the University of California-Irvine, said a bachelor's degree can have benefits that aren't fully reflected in the government's labor data. He said even for lower-skilled jobs such as waitress or cashier, employers tend to value bachelor's degree-holders more highly than high-school graduates, paying them more for the same work and offering promotions.

In addition, U.S. workers increasingly may need to consider their position in a global economy, where they must compete with educated foreign-born residents for jobs. Longer-term government projections also may fail to consider "degree inflation," a growing ubiquity of bachelor's degrees that could make them more commonplace in lower-wage jobs but inadequate for higher-wage ones.

That future may be now for Kelman Edwards Jr., 24, of Murfreesboro, Tennessee, who is waiting to see the returns on his college education.

After earning a biology degree last May, the only job he could find was as a construction worker for five months before he quit to focus on finding a job in his academic field. He applied for positions in laboratories but was told they were looking for people with specialized certifications.

"I thought that me having a biology degree was a gold ticket for me getting into places, but every other job wants you to have previous history in the field," he said. Edwards, who has about $5,500 in student debt, recently met with a career counselor at Middle Tennessee State University. The counselor's main advice: Pursue further education.

"Everyone is always telling you, 'Go to college,'" Edwards said. "But when you graduate, it's kind of an empty cliff."

Copyright 2012 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

For more information about reprints & permissions, visit our FAQ's. To report corrections and clarifications, contact Standards Editor Brent Jones. For publication consideration in the newspaper, send comments to letters@usatoday.com. Include name, phone number, city and state for verification. To view our corrections, go to corrections.usatoday.com.

Posted 4/22/2012 3:52 PM | Updated 4/23/2012 1:10 PM

More from USATODAY

Three killed at Cracker Barrel restaurant in Ohio USATODAY.com in News

Michelle Obama: Prom dress 'split was a little high' USATODAY.com in LifeLine Live

More from the web

Top 5 Extended Car Warranty Buying Mistakes CarBuyingTips.com Blog

Husband speaks out on wife's assisted suicide BBC

Kidney gets transplanted twice in two weeks
USATODAY.com in News

Winners and losers left in wake of 2012 NFL draft USATODAY.com in The Huddle

Kourtney Kardashian's pregnancy problem: Panic attacks USATODAY.com in LifeLine Live

10 Tips on Career Advancement All Business

Edwards Staffer Andrew Young Offers Shocking Testimony About His Boss The Daily Beast

Sorry Charlie: At Work, Nice Guys Finish Last You Beauty

[?]

USA TODAY is now using Facebook Comments on our stories and blog posts to provide an enhanced user experience. To post a comment, log into Facebook and then "Add" your comment. To report spam or abuse, click the "X" in the upper right corner of the comment box. To find out more, read the FAQ and Conversation Guidelines.

116 comments

Add a comment

Robert Benning · Top Commenter · Washington, District of Columbia

Here in lays the truth...college is not about education..its a money machine. I have managed people just out of college that I would not trust putting paper into a fax machine. A college degree today is about the same as a high school education prior to the 80's....

Reply · 56 · Like · Follow Post · April 22 at 3:34pm

Larissa Jones · Top Commenter · Boise State University

That really depends on the degree, I think. Are you absolutely sure you could handle a Bachelors of Science in Computer Science? I hardly think this compares to a High School Diploma.

Reply · 16 · Like · April 22 at 3:42pm

Spencer Lee Marshall · Top Commenter

I know. This is why more people are turning to independent certification authorities for certifications. When someone walk into the HR office with an MCITP in Enterprise Administration nobody can wonder who they slept with to get their certification or if they were waved through on an affirmative action move.

Reply · 20 · Like · April 22 at 3:53pm

Larissa Jones · Top Commenter · Boise State University

Spencer Lee Marshall Really? Slept with? Did I read that correctly? Wow. My GPA is earned thank you very much.

Reply · 8 · Like · April 22 at 3:57pm

Sponsored Links View 19 more

Official Site Top Commenter · How to Discover the "New" Apple...While It's Still a Penny... See Our Daily Stock Picks Get Penny Stock Picks By The Pros. Our 2012 Average 600%!

Buy Penny Stock Without lovepennystocks.com

Bob Hannon · Top Commenter

Buy a link here

That didn't seem important when Obama told them he would give them everything and they didn't have to do any of that terrible conservative-minded stuff like "work" or get an education in something that makes sense.

Reply · 22 · Like · April 22 at 3:26pm

Larissa Jones · Top Commenter · Boise State University

Bob Hannon "get an education"

Home | News | Travel | Money | Sports | Life | Tech | Weather | Visit our Partners: USA WEEKEND | Sports Weekly | Education | Space.com | Travel Tips

Contact us | Advertise | Pressroom | Jobs | FAQ | Reprints/Permissions | Privacy Notice/Your California Privacy Rights | Ad Choices | Terms of Service | Site Index

The failure to pick an appropriate degree just might be the responsibility of the student and not the President of the United States. Don't conservatives preach individual responsibility? Funny how that works except when it doesn't.

Reply · 29 · Like · April 22 at 3:30pm

Larissa Jones · Top Commenter · Boise State University

How long has it been since you've been in college? I've gone back to school and I have to tell you that most of the students I attend college with? Their primary concern is getting a job when they graduate. They're looking at how marketable they'll be when they graduate. The days of getting a degree based on what you like and worrying about getting a job later are over.

Reply · 14 · Like · April 22 at 3:37pm

View 16 more

Alex Sokolik · Top Commenter

and obama has a Planall be Acorn reps ...

Reply · 48 · Like · Follow Post · April 22 at 3:07pm

Don Scotter · Top Commenter

I wonder, is there now a major offered in 'community organizing'?

Reply · 30 · Like · April 22 at 3:59pm

Jose Melendez · Top Commenter

Don Scotter - that's the problem.....too many of them have degrees in community organizing.

Reply · 18 · Like · April 22 at 4:46pm

Patrick Wolf · Top Commenter · St. Mary's University of Minnesota

It must be nice to have such a simple way of looking at the world...

Reply · 13 · Like · April 22 at 5:49pm

View 13 more

Jurdene Ingram · Kansas State

I'm so tired of people blaming the president for everything. It's a democracy, we voted, he won get over it. He does not have control over everything good/bad that happens in america. He is one man and it takes a